MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET Critical thinking can be seen as having two components: 1) a set of information and beliefs generating and processing skills, and 2) the habit, based on intellectual commitment, of using those skills to guide behavior. Therefore, it is contrasted with: 1) the mere acquisition and retention of information on its own, because it implies a particular way in which information is sought and treated; 2) the mere possession of a set of skills, because it implies the continued use of them; and 3) the mere use of these skills ("as exercise") without the acceptance of their results. Critical thinking varies according to the underlying motivation. When it is based on selfish motives, it is often manifested in the skillful manipulation of ideas at the service of the groups themselves, or of the groups themselves, of the vested interests. As such it is typically intellectually defective, yet pragmatically successful could be. When it is based on impartiality and intellectual integrity, it is typically a higher order intellectually, although subject to the burden of "idealism" by those who used to use it selfishly. Critical thinking of any kind is never universal in any individual; everyone is subject to episodes of undisciplined or irrational thought. Therefore, its quality is typically a matter of degree and depends, among other things, on the quality and depth of experience in a given domain of thought or on a particular kind of question. No one is a critical thinker through-and-through, but only such-y-s such degree, with such-y-such views and blind points, subject to such-y-such tendencies towards self-deception. For this reason, the development of skills and critical thinking provisions is a lifelong effort. Another brief Conceptualization of Thoughtchronic thinking is self-guided, self-disciplined thought that tries to reason to the highest level of in a fair way. People who think critically try to live rationally, reasonably, empathically. They are very aware of the inherently imperfect nature of human thought when left unchecked. They strive to diminish the power of their selfish and sociocentric tendencies. They use the intellectual tools offered by critical thinking – concepts and principles that allow them to analyze, evaluate and improve thinking. They work diligently to develop the intellectual virtues of intellectual integrity, intellectual humility, intellectual civility, intellectual empathy, intellectual sense of justice and trust in reason. They realize that no matter how skillful they are as thinkers, they can always improve their thinking skills and sometimes they will fall prey of errors in reasoning, human irrationality, prejudice, prejudice, distortions, rules and social taboos not accepted critically, self-interest and conferred interest. They strive to improve the world in any way they can and contribute to a more rational and civilized society. At the same time, they recognize the complexities often inherent in doing so. They avoid simplistic thinking of complicated issues and strive to adequately consider the rights and needs of others concerned. They recognize the complexities in development as thinkers, and commit themselves to the practice of life-long self-improvement. They embody the Scratic Principle: Unexamined life is not worth living, because they realize that many lives not examined together result in an uncritical, unjust, dangerous world. – Linda Elder, September, 2007 Why Critical Think? The problem Everyone thinks; it is our nature to do it. But much of our thinking, left to itself, is partial, distorted, partial, uninformedsub-right prejudice.
